Abstract

The rejection of domestic waste, agricultural or industrialists in the natural environment, involves the water pollution. In the same way, the surexplotation of the water resources induces an imbalance in the natural environment what is translated in more share of the cases by the deterioration of the water quality.

The dangers of the deterioration of the natural quality of water are so large that the stakes which results from it are so expensive, which imposes the safeguarding of the resources by the quality control. The rapidly increasing mobilization of the water reresources, makes that this control becomes more vital than the water resources are strategic.
